

	Pros	Cons
Brand/Model (Concorde "Colombo")	Concorde is a known but not top level Dutch brand. (maybe kind of the Miele of the Netherlands)	They appear to have not actually made their own bikeeks but rather rebranded other production bikes From Classic Rendezvous: "A brand from the Netherlands who used many suppliers. Among the most appealing were those made by Giovanni Pelizzoli (the original Ciocc, Italy)"
Tubing Columbus Aelle	Not their best but It's still Columbus!	Lower end. appears to be straight gauge (so not Butted - thicker at the ends, thinner in the middle) but perfectly adequate. Full frame set would weigh 2345g versus an SL set 1925g http://www.equusbicycle.com/bike/columbus/columbuschart.htm Uncertain whether it is Tre-Tubi (main triangle only) or Frame and Forks. Is there a columbus sticker on the fork blades? Does it say Tre-Tubi on the seat tube sticker.
Drive train and shifters	Campagnolo. The Best Stuff. Athena. Up there	But downtube shifters are really not very prized these days.
Dropouts	Gipiemme. Not bad, but 2 nd rate	Would be Campagnolo or Columbus on a top tier frame.
Wheels	Campy hubs. Good. Clincher Rims (practical = good)
Bars and Stem	Cinelli! The Best/ excellent	Not applicable
